The Road to US-Cuba Health Cooperation

A Special Issue of MEDICC Review

Deadline for full manuscript submission: September 1, 2017

Deadline for communicating intention to submit manuscript: July 15, 2017

Address your emails to: editors@medicc.org

MEDICC Review is celebrating our 10th anniversary as a peer-reviewed journal with this special issue. Progress towards benefiting people in both the USA and Cuba through partnerships in health and science is the untold story we hope to highlight through papers by health and related professionals reporting on their joint research and other work.

We have two distinguished guest editors: Dr. Pastor Castell-Florit (Director of Cuba's National School of Public Health, accorded the PAHO Health Administration in the Americas Award 2016) and Dr. Jon Andrus (Senior Investigator at the University of Colorado's Center for Global Health, and former PAHO Deputy Director).

Our aim is to reflect work designed collaboratively to contribute to population health, health equity, social determinants of health and wellbeing, global health cooperation, disaster response, environmental health, medical research to tackle diseases, health systems research, and all bilateral programs that frame "health in all policies".

Within this broad mandate, we invite papers from US and Cuban authors – with priority given to jointly written manuscripts – referencing your work together for this special issue of MEDICC Review.

Please find guidelines and other information for authors at <http://www.medicc.org/mediccreview/documents/guidelines-for-authors.pdf> under the "Lessons in International Cooperation" journal section, and consult journal issues at www.medicc.org/mediccreview

As space is limited, please indicate to us by July 15 your intention to submit a manuscript, including the participating institutions and the theme of your paper.

Deadline for full manuscript submission is September 1, 2017.
